THE NATIONAL TRIBUNE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

ONE DOLLAR PER YEAR. INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE.

McELROY & SHOPPELL, Proprietors.

ENTERED AT WASHINGTON POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST 28, 1902.

674 of being a round million. This was an increase of 7,927 since 1899. The experts say that it is the high-water mark. Office: 339 Pennsylvania Avenue N. W.

BRYAN clings tenneiously to the honor of being the chief factor in Roosevelt's election as he was in McKinley's,

As the price of meats goes up the porato becomes of more swelling importance in the hash.

Even so conservative a talker as "Jim" Even so conservative a talker as "Jim" to the long roll. The experts estimate with confidence a constant decrease in the to the acre in North Dakota and 60 bushels in Washington. There must be something in this prosperity talk.

"All confidence a constant accrease in the sumber of pensions from this time. They say that at least 40,000 pensioners will die during the next year. The increasing death roll of the veterans is pathetic, but

THE Rev. M. Baxter, of London, is creating a sensation by confident predictions that Christ will come again in 1929. five years, although the youngest possible soldier of that war, if he were living now, would be something like 135 years old. Most of the veterans will have gone on to meet Him by that time.

THE increase of fools seems to be in but the widows kept on signing the penpretty fair ratio with that of the popu- sion roll. It was long a regular busin lation. The green-goods men of Newark, N. J., are reported to have made $500,000 in the last four years.

A BROOKLYN woman committed suicide next 50 years. because her husband wouldn't take her fishing with him. Queer woman, to want to go five miles from the nearest bargain counter and sit in her old clothes all day of thousands who did not fight and never on a damp rock without another woman's smelled powder, to thousands who deserton a damp rock without another woman's hat in sight to copy or criticize.

In last week's National Tribune the name of Capt. Joseph E. Hart was given this burden. In the exigency of politics as that of the Chairman of the Fifteenth and in the hunt for votes, Congress can as that of the Chairman of the Fifteenth Corps. It should have been Capt, James E. Hart. The matter is important, as there is a Jos. E. Hart in the city, and and which he proudly wishes "exchanges the mails get mixed.

Jackson County, Mo., is opening the way to a most excellent reform by turning a large portion of the revenues from liquor licenses to the improvement of Some 230 miles of fine roads cen- the past 37 years. It is one of the stock tering in Kansas City, and costing about $1,250,000, have been built. Two-thirds of the saloon licenses are devoted to this work and to bridge construction under the direction of the County Court. It is expected that this will result in having in every direction some of the best roads in the country.

THEY can find almost anything they want to out in Kansas, and therefore it is not surprising that they have discovered the bones of a man who lived some 30,000 or 60,000 years ago. A few thousand years more or less does not seem to be has bunted up that editorial, and spitemake any particular difference, and the fully published it. He may have changed Kansans are willing to let him belong to it a little. He may have aggravated its any geologic period the advocates of misstatements with some of his own inwhich will give him the most advertising. vention; he may have made it still more As he was buried 23 feet below the sur- ungrammatical, but it is essentially the face of the earth, his neighbors must have same old balderdash, with the same old gotten awful tired of his discussion of the sentences and wording, the same old false financial question and his method for "bustin! the trusts."

THERE has been so much "fake busi- copy." The editorial is even now on the ness" about liquid air, and so many sharp- hook in a number of country offices, ready ers have gotten money out of credulous to be fired off as their own, the moment people with totally-unfounded representa- the veterans of the neighborhood do sometions of what it could be made to do, that thing that they do not like. it comes as a boon to the public that a real demonstration of its capability has been made by competent persons. A thorough test at Cornell University results in the conclusive statement that the expenditure of one-horse power continuously for one hour will produce an energy that, if utilized in a "perfect machine," will reproduce one-horse power for one minute. That is, one-sixtieth of the power expended can be again realized if a "perfect machine" is used. Of course, it will be difficult, if not impossible, to get a "perfect machine." This wide disparity between expenditure and result secured puts liquid air wholly out of the question for any except a very limited number of mechanical uses.

than a good brisk walk, and now a Can-the Emperor to immediately withdraw ada boy has demonstrated that it is a from the islands and cease to exercise complete cure for consumption, if taken in allopathic doses. Aug. 8, 1901, a San response of the Emperor was to dispatch Francisco doctor told Alfred Y. Allen that his lungs were gone and his end very near. tween Cape Elizabeth and Cape Cod, and He contemplated suicide and several other things, but finally took the strange resolution to start to walk back to Toronto, his home. He had $1.60 in his pocket, he kept at it, and before he got through the Rocky Mountains he was able to do 35 miles a day. He met kind treatment all along the road, and stopped at times where he could find outdoor jobs to do. By the time he had reached Toronto, two years later, he had worn out 35 pairs of boots, and more old clothes than he could remember, but he weighed 135 pounds, and the physicians who examined him declared that they could find no trace of consumption.

THE Boston Pilot traverses Archbishop Ireland's statement: "Let justice be done America: in no other country is there a Government so fair-minded, so impartial, sailed away out of sight, and kept so for so willing to treat all classes of citizens with absolute justice as that with which we are blessed in America." This is absolutely true. Yet the Pilot complains would attempt to enter the harbor of Sa-"that Catholic Cabinet officers of high rank, Governors, Chief Justices, military Admiral Higginson would hold his fleet and civil dignitaries of all kinds are un- off Rockport, Mass., the central position common and almost impossible." The in his line. He at first contemplated a Pilot is simply badly informed. At least ruse to draw the Blue Squadron off to one of the Justices of the Supreme Court the northward by a feint on Portland, but is a Roman Catholic, and possibly two, finally sailed south and west toward Barthough we have never canvassed the re- negat, N. J., where he hoped for the conligions of the members of that august tri- cealment of the prevailing fogs. He finalbunal. There are several of the same ly turned and made a dead rush for Safaith in the Senate, and quite a number lem, but just at dawn last Sunday mornin the House. We have never seen a state- ing a sharp-eyed apprentice boy on the ment of the churches to which the mem- Kearsarge caught sight of the "Prairie" bers of the Cabinet belong, but there must just off the ledge Norman's Wo, and be several Roman Catholics among the about 15 miles distant. The battleships and also in the Diplomatic Corps. The for the Whites, demanding an uncondi-General commanding the Armies of the tional surrender, which was yielded. United States from 1883 to 1888 was a Roman Catholic, and when he died he was highly professional discussion of the techburied by a Cardinal with all the ceremonies of the Church. During the rebel- is somewhat surprised that the defending lion the Army of the Cumberland-the second largest army in the United States of the attacking squadron until it was -was commanded by a very ardent Ro- within a few miles of its objective. man Catholic. What more does the Pilot

"A MILLION PENSIONERS."

The editor of the Waterbury (Conn.) Republican has written an editorial under and enthusiastic to send Gen. R. A. Alger this caption, of which he is so inordinately to the Senate as successor to the late Senproud that he has typewritten under it, ater McMillan. "Exchanges please copy." We shall do so. It is as follows:

The last of them died many years ago enterprise for unscrupulous young women to hang around soldiers' homes and induce aged and decrepit or feeble-minded pensioners to marry them, so that they could draw widows' pensions, perhaps for the next 50 years.

"The taxpayers of this country are now paying nearly half a million dollars every day in the year, exclusive of Sundays, to those who fought for the Union, to tens ed and fled to places of safety, and to thousands of widows of all these classes.

Nothing has happened to cause any rea sonable expectation of any decrease in be trusted to keep the ranks full."

So there's the editorial which he is try ing to palm off as the product of his brain

Bless his unsophisticated, nickel-plated

Waterbury soul, the Copperhead exchanges have been copying that very editorial-or rather stealing it from one another-for articles of that class of papers. It has been passed from one to another, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and back again, no

Every time one of those editors has

Or a veteran's chickens have scratched

Or a veteran has thrown up to him that he was too cowardly or selfish to go into

Or a veteran's son has thumped his son, premises and perverted conclusions.

Our Waterbary friend may rest assured that certain of his "exchanges will seen a veteran get an office he wanted;

telling how many times.

up his fresh-made garden:

the army;

please copy.

FOR SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN.

The veterans of Michigan are united

The comrades everywhere will keenly sympathize with this desire of the Michigan comrades and earnestly hope for its realization. There is no better type of the volunteer soldier alive than Gen. Alger, and he has the abilities to finely equip him for a seat in the Senate. His military record is of the very best. He helped raise a cavalry company at the outbreak of the war, became Captain of a splendid troop of cavalry, and everywhere, and all the time, showed the highest courage, dash and zeal, so that in the course of years of hard fighting and constant service, he rose to the rank of Colonel and brevet Major-General.

He has made a splendid record in civil life. He has been among the foremost in building up the great State of Michigan, and no man stands higher in the esteem of the people of the State. He has been Governor of the State, and his administration was very successful. He was Secretary of War under McKinley, until forced out by the senseless and baseless clamors of the yellows, to which Mc-Kinley unwisely yielded.

He is a man who ought to be in the Senate, for the Senate's sake, for the sake of Michigan, and for the sake of the whole

FREE QUARTERS.

There has been so much confusion of mind in regard to the furnishing of free quarters at the coming National Encampment that it will be well to republish Paragraph IV. of General Orders No. 4, from Headquarters, Grand Army of the Republic, April 14, as follows:

"IV. Congress having prohibited the use of the school buildings of the District of Columbia for any purpose except for school purposes, free quarters for a limited number only can be provided; and only to those who are members in good standing of the Grand Army of the Re-public, and so certified by Post Commanders to the Assistant Adjutants-General of the several Departments. All applications for free quarters must be on file with said Assistant Adjutants-General and forwarded to National Headquarters on or before Sept. 1, 1902.

"The local committee at Washington is entirely relieved from the duty of furnishing free quarters.
'Comrades are informed that the citizens of Washington will provide them and their friends with comfortable lodgings at from 50 cents to $1 per day for This is plain and unmistakable, Only free quarters can be furnished to comin good standing, and these must be secured by applications of Posts to the Assistant Adjutants-General of the Depart-

The first move in the great game of 'Kriegspiel," which has absorbed the attention of the Army and Navy and the National Guard of the Eastern States for several weeks, has ended in the capture of the "enemy's" fleet.

THE NAVAL MANUVERS.

The theory of the game is that the Emperor of Kriegspiel had long viewed with jealous disfavor the rising importance of the United States, and had industriously prepared a navy to curb our pretensions, when opportunity should arise. This came in connection with the Danish Islands. The Emperor thwarted our negotiations to obtain them and appropriated them himself. In response to indignant public sentiment, the President THERE are few things better for health of the United States made a demand on or claim any sovereignty over them. The a powerful fleet to threaten the coast be effect a lodgement somewhere, as a base for further offensive operations.

The "hostile" fleet-called the "White Squadron"-consisted of the "Prairie," and weighed 83 pounds. The first day he "Panther" and "Supply," under Comcould only walk one and a half miles, but mander Pillsbury. The conditions of the game were that it should elude the "Blue Squadron"-"the Kearsarge," "Massachu setts" and "Alabama," commanded by Ad miral Higginson, gain one of six harbors between Boston and Portland, and remain there six hours before being detected and come up with by the defending "Blue Squadron." Practically it narrowed down to 100 miles of coast which the "White' squadron must approach and the "Blue' defend.

There were many anxious days, and particularly nights, for the officers and men of the Blue Squadron, the heavy fogs prevailing on the coast adding to their solicitude. Commander Pillsbury simply three days and 16 hours, while his opponents were wearing themselves out looking for him. He decided that he lem. Mass., and reasoned correctly that Assistant Secretaries and Bureau Chiefs immediately put on all steam and rushed

There will naturally be a great deal of nical points developed, but the lay reader fleet got no knowledge of the approach

The next move will be an attack on the coast, in which the army will participate. POST OFFICE AT CAMP ROOSEVELT.

Postmaster Merritt, of Washington, has decided to establish a branch postoffice at Camp Roosevelt during the Nataional Encampment for the accommodation of veterans who will gather at the Reunions to be held there.

The office will be located near the enavenue, where it will be handy to everybody. Letters will be delivered and received, stamps and stamped envelopes will be sold, and other facilities afforded the Veterans can have their mail addressed to them at "Camp Roosevelt, Washington, D. C." It will be better to add their Corps designation, so that it can be sent directly to their Corps headquarters and delivered to them there.

WRITE TO YOUR CHAIRMAN.

No veteran who thinks of coming to the National Encampment should fail to at once write to the Chairman here of the Corps in which he served. A list of these was published in last week's paper. This will accomplish several things.

It will benefit the writer by notifying many unexpected friends that he is coming, and they will have a chance to meet

It will benefit him by bringing to him chums and bunkies he may not have seen since the war. It will help the Chairman and committee of his Corps in bringing everybody together.

Do not put off writing a day. It will be a very great thing to get together again as many of the old Corps as is possible in Camp Roosevelt.

GEN. W. W. DUDLEY, ex-Commissioner of Pensions, is Chairman of the First Corps for the Reunions at Camp Roose velt, and Maj. E. P. Halstead, Vice Chairman. Both were gallant soldiers in that immortal organization, which did such magnificent fighting at the Second Bull Run, Antietam, Gettysburg and elsewhere. Gen. Dudley went out in the 19th Ind., of the Iron Brigade, succeeded to the command of his regiment at Antietam. and lost a leg at Gettysburg. Maj. Halstead belonged to the 1st Del., and was on Gen. Doubleday's staff. The casualties of the first day at Gettysburg made him the ranking staff officer when the Corps fell back to Cemetery Ridge. Gen. Dudley's address is Pacific Building, Washington, D. C., and Maj. Halstead's, the Pension Bureau. If your regiment was a sharer in any of these glories, write to one of these comrades that you are coming to the Encampment and to arrange for a Reunion of your regiment.

EVERY regiment in the United States Army during the rebellion should make an effort to hold a Reunion at Camp Roosevelt during the National Eucampment. It will be a great meeting, and a memory for the rest of the lives of all who come together then.

Really, if Shad Graham had not seen that the most important part of the work was done, and the remainder could be safely left to the energetic supervision of Si and Shorts he said that here had not seen that the most important part of the work was done, and the remainder could be safely left to the energetic supervision of Si and Shorts he said not have been been to show itself until they soon as they come forward. It has instructions not to show itself until they the death."

Beauregard will have the other side inned in gout for them. I want you to help me. I need you. I see here the hardest job I have ever been confronted with."

"I believe you have, Shad, naswered soon as they come forward. It has instructions not to show itself until they the death."

"I believe you have, Shad, naswered soon as they come forward. It has instructions not to show itself until they the death."

"I wouldn't try it just yet, General," remonstrated Gen. Howard. "It looks pretty risky."

"Nonsense," said Gen. Sherman, "A whole brigade has just gone over." Si and Shorty, he could not have been presuaded to lie down and take sorely-

Si and Shorty, he could not have been presnaded to lie down and take sorely-needed rest.

The patient, untiring boys of the pontoon and pioneer detachments were carrying rails from the fences a mile or more away, and laying them close together on top of the second corduroy, which had sunk below the level of the mud. Si, Shorty and the rest did not restrict themselves to giving orders, but went actively to work to help wherever they could.

The patient, untiring boys of the pontoons forward, somehow. Work them forward somehow, repeated the General petulantly. "Get more men. The first thing to be done is to get a more men. The first thing to be done is to get a man and a line to the other bank. That's the biggest job of all. I want you two to undertake it."

"Work the pontoons forward, somehow. Work them forward somehow," repeated the General petulantly. "Get more men. The first thing to be done is to get a man and a line to the other bank. That's the biggest job of all. I want you two to undertake it."

"General, I have been carefully studying the ground ever since I came up," responded Gen. Howard quietly, "and I am quite sure that every man is there that to me thing to risk a private soldier's life, but quite another to risk the first thing to be done is to get a man and a line to the other bank. That's the biggest job of all. I want you two to undertake it."

"Well, it's one thing to risk added Shorty. "What can we do?'

"I knew you would be, before I asked.

The first thing to be done is to get a man and a line to the other bank. That's the biggest job of all. I want you two to undertake it."

"Wollingly," answered Si. "But how we to get over? Fly?"

"Well, let me go over first," said Gen. Howardly quietly. 'The only a wing commander, and my loss will not be so setten the order, and we're your huckleberries," Gen. Howardly quietly. 'The order and reliave the first thing to be done is to get a man and a line to the other bank. That's the first thing to eithe for the Army," we'll knew you would be, before I as were staggering and rendy to fall under loads they had ambitiously made too large, and if there was any particularly hard and muddy task they assumed their full share, if not all of it. Two or three bours more of the way and their full share, if not all of it. Two or three hours more of this work sufficed to carry the road on to fairly solid ground, and Si waked Shad to tell him that the work was done, "Good," answered Shad, rousing him-self, "Tell Serg't Nasmyth to bring the self, but the road pontoon across, and march out the road as far as the advance pickets. Let him halt there and bivonac. He must not go into park, but remain in line in the road, so as to be ready to move early tomorrow morning. Send word back to Col. McGillienddy, who's in command of the brigade, that he can come on across. I be lieve I can allow myself to take a little

The pontoon train passed on, followed by the brigade, Col. McGillicuddy in temporary command.

It was still raining when the morning came. Despite the fatigues of the day before, everybody was up betimes, in ear nest preparation for what the day might nest preparation for what the day might bring. It promised to be a momentous one, for the Catawba River must be crossed, possibly in the face of determined opposition by the enemy.

The whole army was astir, for behind the brigade came the General commanding the division, with his staff, and he was soon followed by Gen. Jeff C. Davis, commanding the corps, and his staff.

Shad Graham ate his breakfast hastily, mounted and rode off through the mud.

mounted and rode off through the mud and rain to find his train and was soon in a new kind of trouble. The place selected to cross the Cataw-ba River had been left unguarded by Beauregard because he thought it was impossible for any army to move there, and it would have been impossible for any army but Sherman's indomitable young Americans. There the river cuts through the back-bone of high, rigged hills in a deep, narrow gorge. The road leading over the steep ascents was but a trail, over which it would be thought, few wagons had passed in centuries, for it must have been difficult in the best of weather to haul much more than an empty wagon up the precipitous rises. 11 Shad found his train halted at the foo of a hill which rose in benches of rock. He was not surprised to find his usually patient and resourceful Wagonmaster swearing that he "didn't believe that any

"You'll have to find mules with wings if you do," grumbled the Wagonmaster. "They say a man can accomplish any-thing by faith and prayer, but I'm dumbed if I believe the Prophet Elijah could work this train over those ledges." "We'll begin with some work, and may y prayer if that fails," remarked Shad. "Go back and present my compliments to Col. McGillicuddy, and ask him to kindly send me a couple hundred men to make this road passable. Tell Serg't Nasmyth, as you go by, to get out all the picks and shovels, and distribute them to the men as they pass."

Soldiers do not, even when it is done under the pleasantest conditions, regard quarrying stone, grubbing out trees and leveling banks to fill holes as an inviting form of exercise. When it comes to do-ing it with dull and insufficient tools, in the midst of a beating rain, it is a griev-ous trial to the spirit. It lacked the dash and vim of wading breast deep through trance to the grounds from Pennsylvania mud and water to capture a battery or mud and water to capture a battery of run a line of pestering skirmishers. Nev-ertheless, they set to work earnestly and effectively, and the face of the hill changed rapidly under their sturdy blows. Behind the whole army came flooding, like a great river suddenly dammed. Impertinent, self-sufficient Aids, who acted as if all wisdom sat upon their brows, and the ordering of mighty hosts theirs, galloped up and haughtily "presented the General's compliments and what in thunder's the matter? They even essayed to yell orders at the men until stopped by Shad Graham's quiet reminder to them that he was in command and would tolerate no interference, winding up with:

"If you do not like the way things are being done, report it to the Corps Com-mander, under whose orders I am."

Glum-faced Generals and Colonels rode up, to see for themselves the Hill of Difficulty, and do some swearing on their own account at the villainous South Carolina highways. Regiments and brigades the hillsides and wherever else they could find ground into which they did not sink, Finally came Gen. O. O. Howard, the Commander of the Left Wing, with his square jaws set and his bright, kindly eyes looking the impatience he restrained simself from expressing.

A quick, comprehensive glance showed him all the difficulties; likewise that everyhing was being done that could be, and all the men at work that could be employed in the limited space. He wisely confined himself to speaking words of heer and encouragement to the toilers. A cheering beginning far down the road announced the approach of the General-in-Chief himself Everybody in the rear raned up and remarked.

"Now, Old Billy's on hand, and you bet things'll begin ito move."

Gen. Sherman presently appeared, riding straight forward, letting those who were in his way get out of it as best they could. He wore a waterproof, and his hatrim was turned down to shed the rain. The large, powerful horse he bestrode spattered everyone near with mud from his swiftly-moving hoofs. Gen. Sherman's blue eyes blazed with angry impatience, and his rugged face was corrugated with portentous frowns. He acknowledged the cheers with a careless, fretful gesture, without turning his head to so much as glance at the cheerers. He could see nothing but the stoppage ahead. "The whole business is dammed up, and Uncle Billy will be damning up hill and down dale," remarked Shorty, looking around to see if he was out of ear-shot of Otterbein Kramer. "But he can swear till he knocks the filling out of his teeth and he can't get a wagon over that hill "Howard, what's the matter? What's f blasted turkeys in a barnyard on a rainy day? Why don't you get forward asked Gen. Sherman with angry impatience. can see for yourself, General," selves to giving orders, but went actually selves to giving orders, but went to give the selves to giving orders, but went to give the selves and crawl over on the selves the order, and we're your huckleberries, said Shorty.

Copyrighted, 1899, by the publishers of The National Tribune.

Shad came up to Si and Shorty, as they were manuvering around to get a shot at the reckel skirmishers behind the trees, and said with an anxious voice:

"Don't pay any attention to those fellows over them. We haven't a minute to lose, or Beauregard will have the other side lined Really, if Shad Graham had not seen with infantry and artillors."

Shad came up to Si and Shorty, as they were manuvering around to get a shot at the reckel skirmishers behind the trees, and said with an anxious voice:

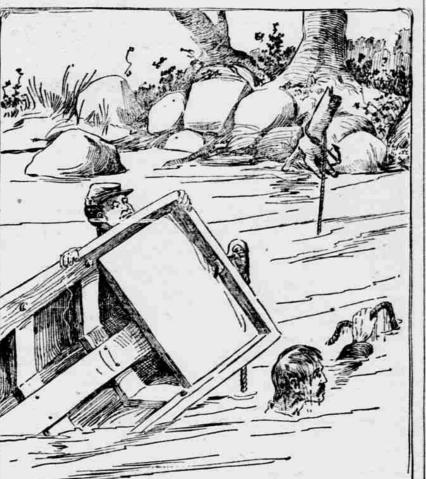

"Don't pay any attention to those fellows over there. There are plenty looking out for them. I want you to help me, with infantry and artillors."

ing out for them. I want you to help me. over."

I need you. I see here the hardest job "I wouldn't try it just yet, General," Count us in till our toe-nails drop off,"

"I can manage to lanch two boats and

"THE BOAT AND PARTNERS DISAPPEARED UNDER THE MUDDY SURFACE,"

a crossing. Get the pontoons forward, and then fix the road for the other wagregiment to help us. "That will I right gladly. Thank God for the news! Col. Smallwood, won't you take your regiment and help those ontoons over? "Won't I? We've been aching for hours for the chance. Attention-battalion, Rally on the pontoon train and walk it up the hill. With a will, now!"

There was no need of this admonition. The men were only too glad to do something that looked like helping an advance They rushed at the train with a yell, and there was a half hour's wild struggle with refractory wheels, the steep grade and clinging mud, when the crest was gained, and the men, each a mass of moist clay, ised what little breath they had left inswer the cheers of their comrades be-

"The pontoons seem to be going up all right, General," remarked Gen. Howard, with complacency. "I knew that my men would get them up as soon as it was pos-sible for any men."
"High time. High time," answered Gen.

Sherman, crossly. "See where the sun is. And the river's to cross yet. Come on. He spurred forward impatiently after

The advance brigade heard the cheers success, and answered them with its own as it rushed out from its concealment and lined up along the bank to open fire on any rebels that might be on the other side to oppose the pontoon laying. Only a few startled pickets happened to be there, who at first took to their heels at the apparition of such a host of enemies, but presently came stringing arrived and were sent off into bivouac on back, and opened a desultory popping from behind the trees.

"If the court knows herself, and she thinks she do, that river's going to be a blamed sight tougher job than the hill," remarked Shorty, as he and Si rode down to the bank and looked across. "If Shad ever gets his pontoons stretched across anchor had lodged, to make it secure, but that old double-gage tail-race he'll have as Shorty appeared on the other side of it to shoot 'em out of a gun, and then an chor 'em to the underpinning of eternity to hold 'em. Why, the water's running worse'n the Mississippi River through a crevasse in the levee."
"I don't wonder that Beauregard didn't expect us to cross here," murmured Si, "He must've been here and taken a look at the place. The gorge through which the Catawba River ran was 250 yards wide at that point, and all the deluge of water which had fallen on the mountains above was tearing through the canyon in a boiling, turbid rush. "Looks as if the boats'd be battered to pieces against the rocks on the bank the minute they're lanched," commented Abe. Gens. Sherman, Howard and Jeff Davis rode down to the bank, gazed at the turbulent flood, and watche without a moment's hesitation, select the ed Abe, as he stopped to refill his maga-added Gen. Jeff Davis, in his sour, post-tive way. "I've compared his work too often to have the least uncertainty about

It was fearfully hard, dangerous toi

"Now's the time for him to prove no time doing it. If he can put a bridge across there, and make it hold, I'll con-cede he is master of his business. But cede he is master of his busine he's got to do it in a hurry. V wait." "Well, I'll be satisfied if he can do remarked Gen. Howard, with a shrug of at all," said Gen. Davis, sourly. "It is his shoulders. "Our mules can go almost not a question of time, but of being ever anywhere, but they can't climb the side able to do it until the flood runs out."

swearing that he "didn't believe that any dumbed mule that wuz ever foaled could climb a ladder. That wa'n't no mule's business, no matter what Billy Sherman said."

"Don't be discouraged, Burlong," said Shad cheerfully. "We'll find some way to get over the hill."

"You'll have to find mules with circuit. Get the pontoons forward, a crossing. Get the pontoons forward, current will swing it over close to contact the whole army in charge. He is doing great work, as he always does, and it will help matters out not to interfere with him."

"But the pontoons must go forward. The third boat I want you to get into. You will take in with you a light anchor fastened to a line. The boat will be held by a strong rope which we shall pay out from this side. My judgment is that the ioneers in the whole army in charge. He | anchor them fast. That is as far as current will swing it over close to yonder point. You must watch your chances, and At that moment Shad Graham ap- when you get as near as you can throw your anchor, and catch on that white oak proached the Commander of the division and reported:

"General, I think that we can now get the pontoons over the hill if you will send the pontoons over the hill if you will be all right. You will be all right. You will never the pontoons over the hill if you will be all right. You will be a broad-minded, honorable man and understand the pontoons over the hill if you will be a broad-minded the pontoons over the hi after you've caught the stump.

upset, God help you."
"Fetch out your boat," said Shorty, pulling off his overcoat. "I've got a mole on my neck. I was never born to be

Si and Shorty got into the boat amid the deep interest and attention of the officers and soldiers on the bank. All eyes were on them except those of the boys who were keeping down the rebel pickets, and they redoubled their care that the rebels might not get a shot into the Col. J. S. Belknap. Si and Shorty sat down directly on the bottom, so as to diminish the danger of overturning.

The boat was drawn out into the boiling current, as the line was carefully paid out under Shad Graham's eye, and tossed wildly in the whirlpool. Shorty took the anchor in his hand, and watched intently for his opportunity. The current carried the boat, as Shad had predicted, near the opposite shore, and Shorty flung the anhor with as good aim as he could, but missed, and a groan of disappointment ose from the watchers on the banks.

"Hardly expected you'd do it the first time, boys," called out Shad Graham. "We'll pull the boat back, and give you The second time Shorty's nerves and uscles were keenly alert; he anchor with a true aim, but he became so excited in pulling in that the sudden change in the boat's direction overset it, amid yells of horror from the watchers, as the boat and partners disappeared under the muddy surface. But the next min-ute a glad cheer arose, as Shorty's hat less red head bobbed up and he was seen to be pulling himself ashore by the rope Si had also hold of the rope, which, luckily, and owing to Shad's forethought, was fastened at its other end to the boat. They ike Newfoundland dogs, amid the renewed heers of their comrades.

They ran to the stump upon which the four or five bullets struck it simultaneous ly from the rebel pickets, who had gath red a little ways off, watching for just that moment.

"Say, what's the matter with you sar-dines over there?" Shorty shouted back across the river as he dodged back, tak-ing the precaution at the same time to bring the rope around the stump, so as to make a secure hitch. "Why ain't you 'tending to your business? Sanelch them rebels over there that's shooting at us Abe, Harry, Monty, Alf and Sandy had been anticipating something of this kind, and ran down the bank to a projecting point opposite where the rebels had gathered. They at once "pumped" such a storm of bullets from their Spencers at he rebels that it did not seem one could be left alive. "They're squelched, Corporal," report-

"You think you've got the best pontoon man in the army, Howard," remarked Gen. Sherman, tentatively.

"Yes, General, I think he's pretty near the best," answered Gen. Howard.

"There's no doubt that he's the best," added Gen. Jeff Davis, in his some real tive way.

It was fearfully hard, dangerous toil, but everybody worked with the spirit which animated Shad Graham. Finally the matter? What's stopping you? Why answered Sherman, "and he must waste the last boat was gotten to the other side, are you all huddled up here like a parcel no time doing it. If he can put a bridge the baulks and chesses laid, and the anchors fastened as well as they could be

We can't ingly in the rapid current.

It did not check Col. McGillicuddy, can do it however. It was all-important that his not a question of time, but of being ever a house."

In the side a house."

To men who had been successfully "Well, well, get the pontoons forward, lyway," urged the General. "Get the local passage of a stream of only 250 yards of the local passage of a stream of only 250 yards of local passage of a stream of only 250 yards of local passage loca width did not at first appear a very difficult matter. But they soon realized that a sea of water rolling off the roof of a State and madly rushing to the ocean through a funnel-like gulch was a very different proposition from the same sea spread out over miles of lowlands. The force of the current was such as to tear falling into the water and drowning. The bowlders from the banks and roll them incessant tramp, tramp was helping loosen the hold of the anchors, and the bridge Shad came up to Si and Shorty, as they was bending down stream in the center in

"Well, it's one thing to risk a private oldier's life, but quite another to risk

Gen. Howard started to lead his horse

"Nothing of the kind," answered Gen. Nothing of the kind, answered Gen. Sherman imperatively. "You stay back here and unravel this tangle the army has gotten into, and see that they pass over promptly and in order. I must go across and take a look at the country ahead."

"General." remonstrated Shad Graham, "I'm afraid those anchors are dragging. Wait a little until we see if we can't strengthen the center."

"Strengthen it after I get across," replied the General, leading his horse down.

"I'm in a hurry to get over."

The bridge bad gotten so much worse during the discussion that everybody watched anxiously the General's progress, The timbers creaked, the line sagged, the General slipped in the mud and seemed on the point of falling into the river; his horse skated along the planks, almost to the water's edge, and every other direful accident seemed impending.

The center gave a loud crack as he passed, and then gave way with a breaking of beams. A long gap broke out in the middle of the bridge and tossed away on the angry waters.

A few minutes later, and the General and his staff would have gone down with the fragments of the ruptured pontoon.

A thrill of terror in the watchers on the banks was followed by tumultuous shouts of joy as they saw the General and his staff scrambling up through the mud of the steep bank on the other side.

(To be continued.) THE LATE JUSTICE LONG.

It will gratify many thousands of the veterans who served in the Department of the South to learn that the gallant old Colonel of the 85th N. Y .- Col. J. S. Belknap-is still alive and well, despite his burden of 80 years. His handwriting is as firm and distinct as in his prime, and his ideas as clear and decided, as the following letter will show:

Editor National Tribune: After reading the account of the suffering of that noble patriot, Chas. D. Long, a Justice of the Supreme Court of Michigan, result-ing from doing his full share in keeping the starry emblem of Freedom floating over an undivided country, and the treatment he afterwards received from the Pension Commissioner, after losing so much of his patriotic blood and one arm fighting for our country, I send you his letter to me of July 22, 1894, to publish, to show that he was true to his comrades.

His letter shows that he made the fight for those who wore the blue to have the pension laws executed as intended by a generous Government, and not the whims of the Pension Commissioner, who would not give the old soldier as good treatment as the law does common criminals, for the law gives the criminal the benefit of the accordingly. That is all the old soldiers will ask of the Commissioner, and I think we have just such a man in our present

Late Colonel 85th N. Y., Weston's Mills,

N. Y. The letter from Justice Long is as follows:

Supreme Court of Michigan, Lansing, Jan. 22, 1894.

Dear Sir and Comrade: Your very In reply let me thank you for your words. I assure you that such words coming from my old comrades are sufficient recompense for all the trouble I have been put to Beli ve me, my dear comrade, I should not have commenced this proceeding on my own account alone, but with thousands being suspended, it became neces sary that someone in their interest make a test case of the power of the Commisdoner. If in this case our ld comrades are benefited I am truly thankful. Thanking you again for your words of kindness, I am, very truly yours,

CHAS. D. LONG. PERSONAL.

The comrades generally are hoping for the restoration of Capt. H. T. Johns, who was discharged from the Pension Bureau by Evans for telling the truth in a news-paper article. Capt. Johns, who was a member of the 49th Mass., a very good soldier, and a man of unusual ability, is now prevented from reinstatement on ac-count of his age. He is 74 years old, In count of his age. spite of this age his record shows that work was up to the very best standard done in the office, both for rapidity and correctness. Capt. Johns made a great many sacrifices for the comrades, not only in braving the wrath of Commission er Evans, but in publications, at his own expense, which showed the inwardness the pension administration in a way that could not be met. We all hope that he will be reinstated.

Past Commander-in-Chief R. B. Beath, of Philadelphia, Pa., has gone with his wife for a fishing trip to the Muskoka Lakes in Canada. Mrs. Beath is regarded as the better fisherman, and if there are any fish caught her bag will have the most of them. Almost simultaneously with the elevation of Col. Oliver Wendell Holmes to the Supreme Bench of the United States comes the intelligence of a similar pro-motion to another comrade who is a most enthusiastic Grand Army man. Henri C. St. Pierre has been promoted to the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec. Comrade St. Pierre was a Corporal in the 76th N. Y., and was as gallant a little soldier as there was in the ranks of that splendid regiment. He was taken prison-er at Mine Run, and was a comrade of John McElroy at Andersonville, Florence and elsewhere. He went to Canada at the close of the war, entered the practice of the law, and achieved a distinction that placed him in the front ranks of the Do minion lawyers. In spite of his foreign residence, he has always maintained a warm interest in his old comrades. He belongs to the Grand Army of the Republic and was instrumental in securing the holding of the pleasant Annual Encampment of the Department of Vermont in Toronto. It is hoped that he will be present at the National Encampment. All the comrades will rejoice at his deserved

Maj. Samuel Klotz died at his Summer